I think there should be fairness. I request that any rule include water testing to prove a problem comes from a specific property before imposing costly mandates. I ask Ecology to extend the deadline so agriculture groups, rural county commissioners, and property rights advocates can fully participate in this process. All stakeholders should have a seat at the rulemaking table, not just some.

The freedom to choose between federal or state best-practice guidelines. I insist that Ecology review all the science, not cherry-pick the data that supports their predetermined solution.

The officials in Olympia have had decades to build this legal fortress. Now they're using it to seize control of how we live and work in rural areas.
