While we all want our rivers and streams to be clean, safe, usable and free from pollution, this plan carries things too far. I am concerned that voluntary water quality guidelines could be converted into mandatory land-use restrictions without requiring proof of actual pollution or harm, threatening private property rights. The criteria and methodology for measuring and determining sources of nonpoint pollution are not adequately defined. This plan is flawed and endangers private property rights, while failing to actually to what it purports to do.
