

Peter Stedman

During proposal protocol small landowners felt that current riparian practices fell short of mitigating warming headwaters. In collaboration with DNR landowners contributed to devising methods, both approving study plans and signing off on the final reports. It is my feeling that those opposing scientifically sound measures regarding a change in riparian buffers of non-fish bearing streams are big timber interests and not independent smaller landowners. I am in favor of rule changes.