Hello,

I would like to state that I do not object to stream buffers to improve water quality and habitat. I do object to the taking of timber, through these buffers, without proper compensation to the landowners. I believe landowners should be fully compensated for the market-value of timber that is required to be left in the stream buffers. And once that baseline of market value is calculated, for every harvest rotation (approximately 40 years) the landowners should be compensated for that volume of timber based on current market-value.

Sincerely,

Jeremy Miller
