Hello.. During the lockdown, a family "took over" a strip of land belonging to a deceased woman in Canada. The land is on the banks of California Creek, on Loomis Trail Road past Bridge Road. My sister-in-law lives down the road and took pictures of toilet paper floating in the water. We both called the Health Department, which amounted to nothing. They became a topic on our local "NextDoor" page, since there are a number of homes on the side of California Creek. The "squatters" said back then that they took their RV to the State Park to empty their waste tank.. not sure how they could have driven it out. Now, there are several more RVs and lots of cars and equipment and ELECTRICITY and it seems NO ONE is checking to see where they are emptying their RV tanks. I don't know if this is a Washington State Department of Ecology concern, but doesn't the water in California Creek flow into Drayton Harbor?? Thank you for reading..
