In the words of Washington State Governor Jay Inslee, "Climate change is a matter of great peril but also one of great promise. We can pioneer the industries of the future, create millions of good-paying jobs, and build the clean energy economy of the future." Washington is fortunate to have a governor who advocates for action on climate and who has the vision to see the economic advantages of abandoning fossil fuels and moving toward renewable energy. Listen to your governor, do not accept the Kalama Manufacturing & Marine Export Facility.
