

Jane Walker

As we watch the effects of a changing climate impact us directly in the Pacific Northwest, as a State and an individual, we should all feel obligated to mitigate for this. And one of the ways is to not allow for production of a product like methanol, a known contributor both in itself and, indirectly through fracking. I hope that my comment against the building of the Kalama Methanol Manufacturing and Export facility will help us meet our goal of limiting the effects this facility will have on exacerbating climate change.