

H Thom Pence

If there was any doubt before that the Kalama project was a huge smoke screen for corporate greed rather than environmental safe-guarding, then this latest environmental document should erase that notion. From the disastrous effects of fracking, to the multiple opportunities for increased methane leakage, to the overall increase in Washington State's pollution, to the incredibly dubious assertion that this activity in Washington will miraculously eliminate worse pollution in China, this latest attempt to circumnavigate good science with thinly veiled greed and misplaced optimism is surely it. When projects should be actively pursuing net zero green house gas emissions the Kalama project merely overlooks the real problem of added pollution in favor of crystal ball logic! This is not what the world needs and definitely not what Washington State needs nor wants! The Kalama project is merely another nail in the world's biological coffin that would ONLY serve to enrich energy companies at the expense of life on this planet. I strongly stand against such a thinly veiled attempt to further degrade our biosphere in the name of profiteering!