I am writing to comment in favor of approving the needed permits for the proposed Northwest Innovation Works Kalama Methanol facility. This project provides an opportunity for tremendous investment in the area while being a part of addressing greenhouse gas emissions globally. I believe it's important that we recognize pollution of any type does not recognize borders. That's why building a project such as this in Washington State where we have strong environmental and safety requirements makes sense. The level of review has been outstanding and each time the result has shown that this project will have a net positive effect on global emissions. That is why I urge you to approve the needed permits that will allow this project to move forward and help Washington State to be a leader in using technology and innovation to improve the way industry functions. Thank you for the important work that you do for all of us.

Respectfully, Clint Bryson
