

Melba Dlugonski

My concerns will be discounted because they relate to the overview. Humanity persists in kicking the can down the road, destroying a few more acres of the planet permanently in a desperate attempt to avoid reducing our consumption of energy and finite resources. The clock toward climate collapse is approaching irreversible disaster. The brilliant minds should focus on reducing energy consumption.

But governments aren't allowed the concept that we have to make do with what we've got.