

Stuart Levy

The age of mega projects ought to be over. Their impacts are mostly destructive and hard to mitigate. Working with the landscape (even at the cost of development) are always going to pay dividends, cope with their consequences, and if absolutely necessary will be easier to undo.