

Ashley Johnson

I am opposed to this method of flood control as it will further harm the salmon. It takes us decades to get dams removed or altered to protect salmon - we don't have decades to fight this after we put it in and realize it was the wrong choice. Fewer than 75 Southern Resident Orcas remain. On top of this we will spend billions of dollars that we need for other projects and it might not even be successful at reducing flood risk. There are other options that respect the environment and probably come at a much lower cost point such as wetland recovery or changing existing levees.