

Dan Watson

It is surprising that we are still considering dams on wild rivers in the 21st Century after the proven fact that fisheries are badly impacted where fish spawning grounds and paths to the ocean are impeded.

Dam removals of the last several decades have shown that the fisheries can recover when these impediments are removed. Gravel transport is crucial to the breeding success of salmonids. Please consider downstream alternatives to this dam (such as levies).

Dan Watson, MS

Marine Biology