Just a Native Californian that has moved North. But what I have seen in California over 70 years is that Dams are not the solution. And it seems to follow the logic of the Eastern States that are taking down Dams.

In California it was Governor Pat Brown & he liked dams, & he had a lot built. But come to find out, first the site destroys what was there & then upstream enviornmental disasters along the rivers. Land, trees, homes that become part of the damage.

Later downstream it becomes a battle for what & how the releases go & what damage is caused when there needs to be a large, quick release because of snow melt or just lots of rain.

If the goal is for energy then Wind & Solar do a better job!

Thank you, Gerard A. Ridella
