I oppose the Chehalis river dam. The dam will harm chinook salmon, which are endangered and actively trying to be brought back by the state of Washington. Why keep spending money on salmon restoration if we are going to place new dams that will be disastrous to the species population?

There are other methods of protecting communities from flooding that have been shown to work better as our climate changes. Protecting our communities from flooding is important, but so is protecting the salmon. There are methods, other than dams, that will let us help both groups.
