

Cinda Johansen

Every time a dam is demolished the river starts returning to what was before being dammed up. The plants return, the trees return, the wildlife on the rivers edge return and most importantly the fish start returning. We all saw it when the dams on the Klamath River were demolished one by one. The proof is there so this new dam must not happen.