

Stella Haberman

The proposed Chehalis River Dam threatens the recovery of critically endangered Southern Resident killer whales and salmon populations, further jeopardizing their survival. These iconic species rely on healthy river ecosystems and abundant salmon runs. The proposed dam would block vital fish migration routes; including Chinook salmon which is the main food source of SRKWs, and risks devastating local fisheries.