

Rogers James

Protecting wildlife must always be a top priority when planning large-scale alterations to the flow of our rivers and waterways, especially when they are utilized by endangered and crucial species to our ecosystems. Surely it is worth the effort to take time and energy to create a plan for the Chehalis River that does not put the killer whale and salmon populations at further risk of endangerment and extinction.