

Katie Hallett

The Chehalis River Basin is integral to the cultural and subsistence practices of local tribes, including the Quinault Indian Nation. The dam's construction would inundate tribal lands, disrupting traditional activities such as fishing, hunting, and gathering. The loss of salmon populations would further threaten the cultural heritage and food security of these communities.