I am very concerned about the proposed dam on the Chehalis River, the last free-flowing river in Washington. The Coho and Chinook salmon are facing dramatically reduced populations and this project would speed up their extinction. The extinction of these fish would have devastating effects on other wildlife, including Orcas, and also on commercial fishing.

Also, in an era when dams are being dismantled, this project represents going back in time. Please support other ways of mitigating flood damage. There are people already exploring these ways.

I am a long time member of Vashon Bird Alliance and am very concerned with damage done to the environment and wildlife.
