

Heather Ikeler

The Chehalis River is richly biodiverse, providing habitat for an array of species including beavers, salmon and elk. All will be negatively impacted by a (hugely expensive) dam with no guarantee of success. There are already science based, proven methods of addressing flooding issues that preserve the Chehalis's cultural and ecological wealth and don't use billions of taxpayer dollars or violate treaty rights.

Sincerely, Heather Ikeler