

TODD CHAPUT

Reliable access to electricity is an expectation of the general public. As we transition from fossil fuels to a cleaner and more sustainable option, it is vital that we move forward in a manner that encourages this transition but recognizes that we need to keep maintain a base level of service. Any future growth, which translates into, options for the next generation, will rely on new opportunities provided by economic growth. A green future is the goal, but without jobs or energy, who are we doing it for.