It is time for the federal government to stop interfering with Washington's clean energy transition and permanently close the TransAlta Centralia coal plant. For years, this facility has stood as the state's largest single climate polluter. Forcing it to remain on standby under repeated emergency orders only burdens ratepayers and extends its legacy of toxic emissions. Instead of keeping this outdated coal infrastructure on life support, we must fully pivot to safer, more cost-effective alternatives like solar, wind, and battery storage for power generation.
