

Callie LeVina

Thank you for the opportunity to comment. I support efforts to improve air quality and reduce environmental harm, provided that implementation remains grounded in fairness, compassion, and common sense.

From a universal perspective, the goal must be to protect the dignity of all life—human and ecological—while ensuring that no group is unfairly burdened or left behind. True sustainability honors both environmental responsibility and social justice. Policies should reflect respect for individual livelihoods, encourage innovation without coercion, and reduce harm without enabling greed or exploitation.

Any effective path forward must be one where people are empowered, not punished, and where the care for our planet is matched by care for each other. Solutions rooted in mutual respect, equity, and long-term vision are the ones that truly serve future generations.

Please continue to refine this program in a way that values both environmental health and human integrity. We can find a just and compassionate balance.