

Jeremy Miller

I believe the State of Washington should abandon the Advanced Clean Trucks regulations. These are onerous and unnecessary. These rules do nothing but hamstring the state's economy, driving businesses to free states. The idea that emissions from vehicles are a greater pollutant than wildfire smoke is laughable. In my opinion, running our economy into the ground due to ridiculous restrictions, all the while countries like China and India spew immense quantities of pollutants into the atmosphere, is criminal behavior, but unfortunately not surprising in this radical left-wing environment. Money would be much better spent thinning our overgrown public forests and protecting communities from dangerous wildfires.