

kenneth Hairston

The failure of these boards is that the vehicles that you attempt to regulate are used in 80% or more of the state in farm and industrial service. Yet you propose regulations that hurt those services, raise consumer prices, and do little to nothing to the ecology of the state on a comparative scale to world wide. You decisions and regulations pander to the less than 20% who would not know which end of a farm animal their chicken leg comes from, and you additionally fail to inform them that the percentage of improvement is on a .00001% scale worldwide, so as to be unfelt in their "ecology" other than the substantial increase they the consumer feels at the grocery, the gas pump and in addition enforcement costs they, the consumer will feel. Typical government overreach for the perception of accomplishing "something".