

Arnold Strang

"The great tragedy of the climate crisis is that seven and a half billion people must pay the price – in the form of a degraded planet – so that a couple of dozen polluting interests can continue to make record profits". "It is a great moral failing of our political system that we have allowed this to happen."