

Jared Howe

I support ZEVergreen. State action on clean transportation is important to me and my community, family, health, and well-being. Washington needs to step up—especially now that the federal government is rolling back progress on climate and clean transportation. We can't afford to wait.

Access to electric vehicles should be easier for everyone, especially for lower-income families who would benefit most from not having to pay for gas. EV charging should be simple, reliable, and available in every neighborhood—not just in wealthier zip codes.

Transportation is our state's largest source of climate pollution. If we're serious about meeting our climate goals, we need to invest in clean mobility and make it accessible to all. Personally, switching to an EV has made a huge difference in my monthly expenses and peace of mind. I want others to have that opportunity too.