

Donna Fellenberg

In these times of constant turmoil, living three miles from the Delaware river is a gift from heaven. Actually, it's a gift that I've worked hard to keep along with the thousands of others who care about our world, the air we breathe, the soil we grow from and the water we drink. We have a well on our property that gives us constant pure water. When I'm driving around I often comment to myself about the incredible amount of water we sit on. Everywhere you go in the Delaware river basin, you don't have to dig too deep to hit water. And after I observe this, I think about the farms in Dimock, Pa, the countless wells that have been poisoned all over the country due to myriad reasons involved in fracking; lots of human error, the biggest of which is in thinking that you can safely regulate an industry that on a daily basis, disregards the little regulations that there are. We need to remove ourselves from the enslavement that fossil fuels cause. Ban fracking and everything involved in it because you can't regulate stupid, or exhaustion, or greed. Mistakes have been made all over the world. Let's keep the DRB free from this gross mistake that is fracking.