

Richard Burke

There is already an oversupply of readily available natural gas. Unless the harmful chemical used to be extracted can be disposed of properly, private enterprise does not have the right to poison the waterways of the American people. These waters are used for recreation, and many other businesses, like those related to the fishing industry, depend on clean water.