

William Silverman

Leave fossil fuels in the ground. Fracking's negative environmental impacts are too great as are the risks of increasing the levels of methane in the atmosphere. Methane and the resulting carbon dioxide from its oxidation will only add to the already serious problems generated by them causing global warming and climate change.