

David Yennior

Fracking is a scourge on the environment. Each well requires millions of gallons of clean water which is mixed with toxins then injected into the earth. While clean, safe drinking water is becoming more scarce, these millions of gallons are never returned to potable state. Fracking is simply poisoning water and is not sustainable.