

Dan Greaney

A role of government should be to protect its people, and the 15 million people who depend on the Delaware River (not to mention the wildlife it nourishes) deserve to have fracking effluent kept out of it. The history of allowing inadequately tested substances, and especially unknown or suspect substances, into our environmental systems is fraught with extensive harm--think thalidomide, DDT, the brew that ignited on the Cuyahoga, dumped antibiotics, neonicotinoids, and looming large, just too much carbon dioxide. Please keep fracking out of the Delaware River Basin until such time as its effluent is shown to be very likely safe.
