

Philip Stern

It is well known that hydraulic fracturing costs more than it makes. It pollutes groundwater and robs Americans of clean water. Water is more precious than natural gas, which is after all, a fossil fuel and hence not a long range solution to our energy problems. In sum, the practice of hydraulic fracturing is a menace to our natural resource that is so important, water.