

Carin Barbanel

Hydraulic fracturing is shown to release more harmful gasses into the air and underground aquifers than was first thought. The permanent damage and net negatives to surrounding waterways and land make it a loss when external costs start to be factored in. Those costs are borne by those who live nearby and tax payers in the state in the near term, and all of us in the long. It is not even a positive / negative pattern. Please stop this before it starts.