

David Wasilewski

It's bad enough that Pennsylvania has allowed an unsafe industry to overrun virtually the entire state with practices that seriously compromise both the integrity of our environment as well as the health of our citizens. With the single exception of the Delaware River water shed, every source of water in Pennsylvania has been put at risk. Moreover, the handling of chemicals, storing of toxic waste in on site pits, and implementation of multi-unit compressor stations further exacerbates health issues associated with severely diminished air quality. At very least, the Delaware water shed should be allowed to represent a control measure as this menacing state wide "experiment" unfolds. We ask that you make permanent the ban on fracking in the Delaware water shed.