I am pleased to hear the DRBC (NY NJ PA DE) are all seriously considering a very intelligent move: a complete ban on all drilling and or Fracking in or around the Delaware river. This is wonderful news considering over 15 million people count on that drinking water to survive. Here's why I'm concerned: wastewater processing and treatment from fracking sites was NOT listed as a ban. This makes me think of an analogy. Quitting cigarettes for your health but your colleagues still blow smoke in your face all day every day. Isn't the goal here to keep everyone safe with our clean water? Let's be smart about this. You will all go down in history as either the most proactive and wise leaders of your states if you amend the regulations to truly protect our water and environment OR you will be the lazy, incompetent and careless non leaders who ruined the only water we had and gave into special and corporate interests over their people they represented and now regret it. You guys are smart. Do the right thing.
