

Barbara Andrew

Any hydraulic fracking in or near the Delaware River is abhorrent to me. The water used in fracking is forever gone, the instability often rendered to the land is not worth the resulting profits which remand to a few while the threat affects many. The Delaware and its surrounding lands are a regional treasure (as well as a national one) in the domain of drinking water, wildlife preservation, recreation, tourism, and other areas I will refrain from detailing here. I urge that no fracking be permitted whatsoever.