

Elizabeth Barger

The Susquehanna River Basin has been producing natural gas via fracking for a decade now. The residents of the Delaware River Basin should be allowed the same opportunity. Here is why:

The governing majority of the DRBC (PA, NY and USACE) is the same governing majority of the SRBC so they are fully aware that fracking is of no threat to water quality, based on evidence already in the possession of DRBC decision-makers.

Given the SRBC data from its ongoing water quality monitoring programs and the DRBC knowledge of that data, any decision to ban fracking in the DRBC region is purely political and without scientific foundation.