

Lane Meyers

As a citizen of Wyoming this greatly concerns me because of the potential health risks not only for citizens but the wildlife throughout Wyoming. One of our countries greatest, and first national parks, Yellowstone, could take a substantial negative impact. If the wildlife is affected the tourism in Yellowstone will begin to decline. Tourism in Yellowstone is a major part of Wyoming's economic system. I can keep going on with the negatives of dumping the waste in the water. There is no positive benefit to dumping the waste into the waters of Wyoming and Montana; the only reason to do this is because it is the "easy way out" for the oil company. There are many alternative ways to get rid of the waste, including deep-well injection, evaporation ponds, recycling and reuse, and advanced treatment technologies. I sincerely hope you listen to the concerned people and take their comments into thought.