

Chris Scheibe

There must be a better way to dispose of the waste water from oil and gas development. Taking the irresponsible step of dumping it into near by streams, just washes it away to become someone else's mess down stream. Without the option to just dump pollution into surface waters, forces industries to be accountable and pursue better options that protect resources and public health for all concerned. I know Wyoming can do better at economic development. The greedy mind set of our legislature and the attitude of fossil fuels or bust, has limited Wyoming's future to a stagnated growth. Nuclear waste dumps and dumping hydro carbon pollutants into our streams has no viable future that benefits the citizens of our state. Far to many legislators of Wyoming are vested in these industries and they are the major road block to Wyoming's economic well being and growth. I praise Wyoming DEQ and thank them for listening to those concerned about our environmental future.