The revised discharge permit requirements and denial of any additional output by the States own DEQ for the Moneta Divide project is absolutely appalling. Since when is changing the rules after they are set acceptable? The answer is that it is not. Wyoming DEQ should not have the power to do that. It would seem hysterical negative advocacy towards the project has won over long standing compliance by the fields operator. I would implore that this decision be reviewed by those state officials that first have the power to do so, and second be able to be rational in their decision. And for saying absolutely no to any additional output in the future, does any thought towards creating jobs, revenue, taxes to the state, and what overall good that would bring to the area have any value? Apparently not. Again I would ask for a full reconsideration of
