

Justin Keen

The Buffalo River watershed is too special of a place to put at risk for one operation. The outdoor recreation activities associated with the cumulative wild places along the buffalo river are a much larger economic engine than one farm. While other states with similar settings to ours are embracing the public lands and their potential revenue generation through recreation, as well as the quality of life opportunities they provide to locals, it would be shortsighted for Arkansas to allow this to proceed. It is not a compromise, it does not best serve the state and citizenry, and it would definitely not be the right choice for Natural State.

Sincerely,

Justin Keen
5th grade teacher
Fayetteville, Arkansas