

Janee Scroggs

I was on the Buffalo River on June 4, 2018. It is not the clear river I have known. The lessons of North Carolina of today tells us that open containing pits cannot be contained through a violent weather event. The pollution is now being swept downstream. A similar event on the tributary of the AR Buffalo River would render it unusable for recreation.