We need a very liberal hunting season 24/7 365 same as coyote rules. I know that sounds shocking to those that love the wolf above all other species, but they are a very difficult animal to hunt. WDFW and APHIS staff couldn't get it done without the use of tracking collars and helicopters. I think if we have coyote rules public tolerance will improve greatly, it would give livestock producers valuable tool to protect livestock (although it won't completely eliminate conflict). I know wolves will be forever on the landscape, we need the tools to deal with it and educate wolves that: people = bad they'll avoid populated areas and stick to backcountry where they belong if they're being shot at 24/7 365
