

Steven Odd

This nation had a relatively stable lifestyle for a hundred years before a concerted effort by interested parties decided to change the balance of nature by reintroducing a known disruptor of that balance. America needs to accept the consequences and properly compensate appropriate parties. Since wolves have no state boundaries the Federal Government needs to be piggy bank. States need to do their part by making adjustments based on their constituents' demands. To that end I recommend the following:

1-Insure livestock producers are properly reimbursed for losses, mitigating measures and monitoring expenses.

2-Allow public hunting and viewing with published lists of contact information of applicable WDFW managers and participating property owners/leasers.