I feel the reintroduction of wolves to the western United States is a very important rebalancing of the ecosystem.

WDFW has done a good job planning for and implementing on the ground responses to the interfacing when wolves, humans, and humans assets overlap. I was at the January 2013 meeting WDFW held at Magnasson Park in Seattle. Wolf Biologists from the Federal government, WDFW personnel, and others laid out a plan and it has been implemented very well since then.

Working wit all user groups that utilize WA state public lands along with lPro Wolf environmental groups, and stockmen landowners can lead to a harmonious Win Win situation for all including the subjects the wolves themselves. Moving forward as pack numbers increase I would not like to see public wolf hunting allowed. I would rather see wolves removed through other methods.

Thank you.
