WA State Governor Inslee criticized the killing entire wolf packs at the behest of the livestock industry - but the Washington Department of Fish & Wildlife is full-steam ahead on planning "post-delisting" wolf management. Despite the fact that the wolf population growth in the state has plateaued in recent years. The Department of Fish & Wildlife needs to resolve the significant problems associated with its current wolf-killing regime, and must not even consider "post-delisting" management (i.e. hunting), as it is wildly inappropriate.
