I am vehemently opposed to the hunting of wolves for sport or killing them due to conflict with cattle. Cattle don't belong on public land -- wolves do! Washington's wolves have not recovered in sufficient numbers to even consider reducing their population. In my 40 years of Washington residency, and my family's miles of backpacking and frequent backwoods camping excursions, I'm the only member of my family to have ever caught a glimpse of a wolf in the wild. I would like more opportunities, not less. Wolves are an integral part of a healthy environment and Washington needs many more.
