After killing whole packs of wolves to protect the financial interests of the cattle industry, WDFW declares "problem solved" and is moving on to "post-delisting wolf management"--translated, that means HUNTING!

Well, my family and I see the real problem as the failure of the WA. wolf population to grow over the past few years. Obviously, this has to do with greed: The rancher's for maximal profit, the public's for ever-cheaper hamburger. We respect neither, nor should this agency.

We hope that WDFW will fulfill its public responsibility to protect the biological diversity and continuing presence of an apex predator that is predictor of the health of its entire ecosystem.
